WESTLAW: preferred over any other online legal research service.

At West, we strive to provide legal professionals with the research tools they need to be more efficient and get better results faster. Maybe that's why, in a recent independent, third-party study, litigators preferred Westlaw over any other online legal research service.

* Includes Casemaker, Loislaw, VersusLaw, and other legal service. "No preference" responses omitted from chart.

When asked which service they prefer to use for online legal research, litigators chose Westlaw over all other competitors.

When litigators were asked which service they prefer to use for specific categories of online legal research, Westlaw was the most preferred in every single category.

About the study

This independent, third-party study sponsored by Thomson Reuters was conducted by Lieberman Research Worldwide in May 2007. Double-blind methodology was used, meaning neither the survey creators nor the respondents were informed of the objective of the study, or knew who sponsored the study. The respondents were litigators who identified themselves as active online researchers. They represented a cross-section of age, gender, and practice segments – from small, medium, and large law firms to the corporate and government sectors.
