Market In Brief

Summary
 LONDON, Oct 5 (Reuters) - European shares ended higher on Monday as better-than-forecast data in the U.S. and Europe helped lift banks, while telecoms were boosted by a merger deal between Telenor and Alfa Group. Forecast-beating service sector data from both the Euro zone and the U.S. helped settle nerves after U.S. jobsless data on Friday added to worries about the emerging global economic recovery, pushing the index to its lowest in four weeks.

The company has put itself up for sale, the Wall Street Journal said on Monday, citing people familiar with the matter. The paper said Oracle Corp and Hewlett-Packard Co were potential bidders for the company but a deal was not imminent and Brocade might not even go ahead with a sale.

Deutsche Bank upgraded the stock to "buy" from "hold," saying it had the potential for significant upside over the next three years.

The company stopped a mid-stage trial of its experimental cancer drug based on a determination that the study was unlikely to meet its main goal.
